C.P. Cavafy (1863-1933),the outsider of the Greek literature, “the Alexandrian” as they called him; or he who outside his poetry doesn’t exist. A new translation that includes texts with the historical background of the poems, and tries to represent the feeling of the poems in English:

Ideal and beloved voices of those who have died, or of those who are lost to us like the dead...

Now and then in our dreams, they speak to us;
now and then in our thoughts, the mind can hear them.

And with their sound for a moment, they return, sounds from the first poetry of our life—
like music, in the night, far away, that fades...
