Patrick, a mid-career Diplomat, and his European wife are furious at his new posting to a second rate Latin American capital. This was after successful tours of duty in Vienna and Berlin as Cultural Attaché. His first week on the job with people he considers his intellectual inferiors is ended by being taken hostage. His rogue captor is a rebellious mid-level commander of La Vereda, a movement of urban guerillas. Fausto—code named Leopard, had organized a siege of the American Embassy that made access to Patrick possible. In his next self-serving act, Fausto kidnaps a female American tourist

Can the Guerilla Commander reassert his authority? Will the U.S. bargain for Patrick's release? Why does Chinese Intelligence want him? Is he a double agent?
