Book 4 of the 'Poetry Is Twisted, Don't Trust Her' series, 'Maw' takes a more animalistic tone. Probably most similar to the second book 'My Little Black Distress'. Maw also contains some emotional poems, such as the one about Simon's late Granny, written shortly after her death.

For those not familiar with the series these are mostly narrative, horror poems. Often of an adult / sexual nature and frequently including fantasy and sci-fi themes. However, there's other kinds of poem in here too. I think they all rhyme this time.
