One of his most notable works, Mike Bartlett Plays Two Nhb Modern Plays, showcases his remarkable talent for storytelling. This collection of plays includes two compelling pieces that explore different facets of human behavior and the complexities of contemporary relationships.

The Plays

1. "Cock"

"Cock" is an unapologetically honest portrayal of desire, identity, and sexual awakening. The play delves into the life of John, a young man torn between his long-term partner and a new love interest. As the story unfolds, the audience is taken on a rollercoaster ride of emotions, questioning societal constructs and challenging conventional notions of love and intimacy.

Bartlett's skillful writing captures the raw intensity of human relationships, painting a vivid picture of the characters' inner conflicts. With its captivating dialogue and nuanced characters, "Cock" leaves a lasting impression, provoking introspection long after the curtains fall.

2. "Bull"

In "Bull," Bartlett creates a gripping and power-packed one-act play centered around workplace dynamics and the cutthroat nature of corporate culture. Set in the ruthless world of office politics, the play follows three colleagues embroiled in a battle for survival as they fight for their place within the company.

Bartlett's sharp dialogue and expert character development bring out the raw emotions and power dynamics at play. As the characters navigate their way through a series of confrontations and mind games, the audience is left at the edge of their seats, captivated by the intense psychological warfare unfolding onstage.

Five ambitious and exciting plays by the multi-award-winning playwright, hailed as 'one of the prime movers in a new golden generation of British playwrights' (Independent), and introduced by the author.

Earthquakes in London (National Theatre & Headlong, 2010) is an epic drama about climate change, population explosion, social breakdown and worldwide paranoia, travelling from 1968 to 2525 and back again. 'The theatrical equivalent of a thrilling roller-coaster ride' (Daily Telegraph)

Love, Love, Love (Paines Plough & Drum Theatre Plymouth, UK tour, 2010; Royal Court & Paines Plough, 2012) examines the baby boomer generation, from coming-of-age in the 1960s to retirement-age more than forty years later, in a play that 'does the clash of generational world views with a devastating precision' (Guardian).

The Enemy is a short play in which a journalist seizes an opportunity to interview the man who shot Osama bin Laden. It was staged by Headlong as part of Decade (St Katherine's Dock, London, 2011), exploring 9/11 and its legacy.

13 (National Theatre, 2011) is a panoramic drama in which a young man returns to London, a city riven by social protest and upheaval, with a radical vision for the future. Premiered on the National's largest stage, it confirmed Bartlett's ability to tackle epic themes with supreme assurance: 'His ambition is distinctive and immense' (Evening Standard).

Medea (Headlong, UK tour, 2012) is a startlingly modern version of Euripides' tragedy, exploring a woman's private fury at her husband's infidelity, while imprisoned in her marital home. 'A savage play for today, superbly well done' (Mail on Sunday)
