Gone is the time when all wished to be literary authors. Today all wish to be scriptwriters. If somebody tells you: “No, I don’t wish to be a scriptwriter” be careful with that guy. He’s a cheat. Everybody, even producers, directors and critics, who curse and damn our work, do in fact long to be scriptwriters. Especially the critics. Each of them has in his drawer an unfinished script.

Everyone would like to invent fascinating stories that millions of people would watch. Everyone yearns to write beautiful lines for famous actors to deliver. Everyone would like to do the red carpet stroll and give a speech thanking their producer, mom, wife, and cat while brandishing that broad-shouldered statuette.

However, many an obstacle awaits a scriptwriter on his way from the story to the statuette. Of course, this book won't help you bypass those obstacles. You're sure to hit each of them at least once – everybody does. But if you read this book closely and do the exercises, you might be able to move forward with only occasional bumps on the way. In the meantime many talented people will continue to hit their heads against whatever obstacles crops up, without moving an inch.
